

Online Research @ Cardiff

This is an Open Access document downloaded from ORCA, Cardiff University's institutional repository: <https://orca.cardiff.ac.uk/id/eprint/88850/>

This is the author's version of a work that was submitted to / accepted for publication.

Citation for final published version:

Evans, Rhiannon Emily ORCID: <https://orcid.org/0000-0002-0239-6331> 2016.
Growing up in care: the disempowerment and disenfranchisement of carers.
BMJ 353 , i1866. 10.1136/bmj.i1866 file

Publishers page: <http://dx.doi.org/10.1136/bmj.i1866>
<<http://dx.doi.org/10.1136/bmj.i1866>>

Please note:

Changes made as a result of publishing processes such as copy-editing, formatting and page numbers may not be reflected in this version. For the definitive version of this publication, please refer to the published source. You are advised to consult the publisher's version if you wish to cite this paper.

This version is being made available in accordance with publisher policies.

See

<http://orca.cf.ac.uk/policies.html> for usage policies. Copyright and moral rights for publications made available in ORCA are retained by the copyright holders.

LETTERS

GROWING UP IN CARE

Growing up in care: the disempowerment and disenfranchisement of carers

Rhiannon E Evans research fellow

Centre for the Development and Evaluation of Complex Interventions for Public Health Improvement (DECIPHer) and Children's Social Care Research and Development Centre (CASCADE), Cardiff University, Cardiff CF10 3BD, UK

Kelly presents a powerful narrative of how her perceptions of the healthcare system are viewed through the lens of earlier traumatic experiences.¹ This compelling account highlights the necessity of practitioners' sensitivity to the histories of those who experience care, but it also raises questions about how professionals interact with and support people charged with the carer role. Birth parents are often given a voice in decision making around their child's health, but the role of "corporate parents" remains ambiguous.

I am currently leading a Health and Social Care Wales study on self harm and suicide in children and young people in care, which is informed by evidence that this population is at increased risk of suicide related outcomes.² Carers have been to the fore in responses to this risk, with the Welsh government's prevention strategy on suicide and self harm acknowledging fostering and adoption agencies as priority care providers.³ However, qualitative research with carers has documented their experience of disempowerment and disenfranchisement within the healthcare system, especially with regard to Child and Adolescent Mental Health Services (CAMHS). Yet many have intimate knowledge of the children they care for, understanding the complex causes and consequences of their health behaviours and outcomes. This is not to suggest that these people's views should be expressed at the expense of those in care, especially where there is clear discord within the caring relationship, but the knowledge that these professionals can bring to the system should not be discounted.

Competing interests: None declared.

Full response at: <http://www.bmj.com/content/352/bmj.i1085/rr-1>.

- 1 Kelly Á. Growing up in care. BMJ 2016;352:i1085. doi:10.1136/bmj.i1085 pmid:26984389.
- 2 Katz LY, Au W, Singal D, et al. Suicide and suicide attempts in children and adolescents in the child welfare system. CMAJ 2011;183:1977-81. doi:10.1503/cmaj.110749 pmid:22007122.
- 3 Welsh Government. Talk to me 2: Suicide and self harm prevention strategy for Wales 2015-2020. <http://gov.wales/docs/dhss/publications/150716strategyen.pdf>

Published by the BMJ Publishing Group Limited. For permission to use (where not already granted under a licence) please go to <http://group.bmj.com/group/rights-licensing/permissions>